Visiting a New Culture

Before you read

- Have you ever visited a country with different customs from yours?

When you travel to a new country, you quickly notice that customs and etiquette can be very different from your own. In Japan, for example, a bow is a common greeting, while in many European countries, people shake hands.

Capital cities are often the most diverse places in a country, home to famous landmarks and a mix of different cultures. Tokyo, for instance, is more crowded and modern than most other Japanese cities, but it also has some of the oldest temples and traditional architecture in the country.

Before travelling, you should learn a few basic customs to show respect. You shouldn't assume that everyone follows the same rules as your own culture — and remember that a stereotype is rarely the full picture of a country's people.

1. What greeting is common in Japan, according to the text?
 - a. A handshake
 - b. A bow
 - c. A hug
 - d. A wave
2. You should learn a few basic customs to show _____.
3. A stereotype gives the full picture of a country's people. — True / False

After you read

- What is one custom from another culture that surprised you?

Preparing for a Cultural Exchange Trip

Before you listen

- What would you research before visiting another country?
1. What does the teacher say students should research?
 - a. Only the weather
 - b. Local customs and etiquette
 - c. Only landmarks
 - d. Nothing in particular
 2. The capital city they are visiting is famous for its _____.
