A Close-Knit Family

Before you read

- How many people are there in your family?
- What do you usually do together as a family?

The Demir family is a close-knit extended family of eight people: parents, three children, and both grandparents, who live in the same house.

Every family member has a household chore. The children's job is to set the table, while their grandmother's favourite task is watering the garden. On weekends, the whole family spends time together — they usually visit their aunt and uncle, and the cousins play with their nephew and niece.

Of course, siblings sometimes argue about small things, like whose turn it is to choose a TV programme. But when someone has a problem, the family always supports each other.
