

Reading

Reading

Choosing the Right School

Before you read

- What type of school do you think suits you best?

Around the world, students can choose from many types of schools. Public schools are usually the cheapest option and follow a national curriculum, while private schools often offer smaller classes and more extracurricular activities, such as debate clubs and sports teams.

Vocational schools are more practical than academic ones, focusing on skills for a specific career. Boarding schools, where students live during term time, can be the most challenging option because students must adapt to being away from their families.

Whichever school they attend, many students feel anxiety before big exams or deadlines. Learning to cope with this pressure — through relaxation techniques, good time management, and support from teachers — helps students build self-esteem and achieve their goals.

1. Which type of school usually offers the most extracurricular activities?

- a. Public schools
- b. Private schools
- c. Vocational schools
- d. None of them

2. Vocational schools are more _____ than academic schools.

3. Boarding schools are described as the easiest option. — True / False

After you read

- What extracurricular activities does your school offer?

