The Day I Caught the Flu

Before you read

- Look at the title. What do you think happens in this text?
- Guess: what are two common symptoms of the flu?

Last Monday, I woke up with a headache and a sore throat. I knew something wasn't right, so I told my mum I felt terrible. "If only I hadn't stayed up so late last week," I thought — maybe I wouldn't have caught a cold so easily.

My mum took my temperature and said I had a fever. She called the school and then took me to see Dr. Kaya, our family doctor. In the waiting room, I saw a nurse checking another patient's blood pressure.

Dr. Kaya listened to my symptoms and said, "You have the flu. If you rested and drank plenty of water, you would recover faster." She gave me some treatment and told me to stay in bed for a few days.

I wish I had taken better care of myself before I got sick — eating more vegetables and sleeping enough hours. Now I understand why it is so important to prevent illness, not just treat it.

After four days of rest, I finally felt better. The whole experience was exhausting, but it also taught me a useful lesson about listening to my body and looking after my well-being.

Small Habits, Big Changes

Before you read

- What does 'well-being' mean to you? Think of one example.
- Guess: what are two small habits that can improve well-being?

For our end-of-theme project, our class decided to create a Well-Being Challenge for the whole school. We wanted to show that small habits can make a big difference to how people feel.

First, we researched simple changes: drinking more water, walking for ten minutes after lessons, and going to bed at the same time every night. If more students tried these habits, they would probably feel less tired and stressed.

We also learned about mindfulness — taking a few quiet minutes to breathe and relax. One student said, "I wish I had discovered mindfulness earlier — it really helps me cope with stress before exams."

For the future, our group decided to set a goal: to build one new healthy habit every month. We know it takes time, but a sustainable lifestyle doesn't happen overnight.

In the end, we designed a short show about health and well-being, with characters like a doctor, a nurse and a patient, to present our ideas to the school in a fun and memorable way.
