A Family of Dreams

Before you read

- Look at the title. What do you think this text is about?
- Guess: what job or dream might each family member have?

My name is Elif and my family has many different dreams for the future. For our school project, we have been thinking about each person's aspirations and how we support each other.

My father has always wanted to open his own bakery. He has been saving money for years, and last month he was finally able to rent a small shop in our neighbourhood. My mother is proud of him and helps him plan the menu every evening.

My older brother, Kaan, hopes to become a software engineer. He is interested in computers and has been learning to code since he was twelve. My parents believe in his ability, so they bought him a new laptop for his birthday.

As for me, my ambition is to study medicine. I want to help people who are ill, just like the doctor who took care of my grandmother. My family encourages me to study hard, and I am determined to achieve my goal.

We all support each other's dreams. My father says that with persistence and a little help from your family, almost anything is possible.

My Sister's Changing Plans

Before you read

- What do you think 'changing your mind about the future' means?
- Guess: why might someone change their career plan?

For years, my sister Selin has been talking about becoming a lawyer. She has always been good at arguing and giving opinions, so it seemed like the perfect career for her.

Last year, however, Selin started volunteering at an animal shelter near our house. She has been working there every weekend since March, and she quickly fell in love with the work.

Now Selin has decided to study veterinary medicine instead of law. She has been able to talk to a real vet about the course, and she has been preparing for the entrance exam every evening.

At first, our parents were surprised, but they have been very supportive. My mother says it's normal for people's ambitions to change as they discover new interests.

Selin is now determined to work towards her new goal. She says the most important thing is to follow a path that makes you happy, not just a path that other people expect.
