Our Classroom Rules

Before you read

- Look at the title. What classroom rules do you think this text will mention?
- Guess: who usually gives instructions in the classroom?

My name is Elif and I'm in Year 10. Every morning, our teacher checks the timetable and tells us what we're going to study. There is a big whiteboard at the front of our classroom, and our teacher writes the plan for the lesson on it.

In our classroom, we must listen carefully to the teacher's instructions. If we don't understand something, we can ask a question — we just have to raise our hand first. We mustn't interrupt when someone else is speaking.

There are five rows of desks in our classroom, and there is a classroom monitor who helps the teacher every week. This week, it's my turn to be the monitor, so I hand out the worksheets and collect the homework.

For most activities, we work with a partner or in small groups. We have to cooperate and take turns, because everyone must share ideas and materials. Sometimes the teacher says 'Shall we work in pairs today?' and everyone gets excited.

I like our classroom because the rules are clear and fair. Don't run, don't shout, and always listen — these are simple instructions, but they help everyone learn together.

1. What is the text mainly about?

- What classroom jobs (like classroom monitor) does your own class have? Write two sentences.
- Compare Elif's classroom rules with your own class rules. Find one similarity and one difference.

Planning Our Ideal Classroom

Before you read

- What do you think makes a classroom a good place to study?
- Guess: what jobs or roles could students have in an ideal classroom?

For our project this term, our class had to design an ideal classroom with ideal activities. First, we had a class discussion: 'Shall we choose our own roles, or shall the teacher choose them?' In the end, we voted, and everyone chose a role.

In our ideal classroom, there is a clear timetable on the wall, and there are enough chairs and books for every student. There isn't a lot of noise, because everyone respects the classroom rules.

Every student has a responsibility. There is a classroom monitor who checks the whiteboard is clean, a materials manager who gives out worksheets, and a timekeeper who watches the clock during group activities.

We must cooperate and take turns in every activity. Students mustn't interrupt each other, and everyone can ask for help without feeling embarrassed. We also revise new vocabulary together at the end of each lesson.

For the writing task, each group wrote a short script about their ideal roles and routines. Next, we're going to act out these roles in class and present our ideal classroom to the other students.

1. What is the text mainly about?

- a. A test students take at school
- b. Planning roles and rules for an ideal classroom
- c. A new whiteboard for the classroom

2. How did the class choose their roles?

- a. The teacher chose for them
- b. They voted after a discussion
- c. They didn't choose roles at all

3. What does the materials manager do?

- a. Checks the whiteboard is clean
- b. Gives out worksheets
- c. Watches the clock

4. What do students do at the end of each lesson?

- a. Clean the classroom
- b. Revise new vocabulary together
- c. Write a test

5. In this ideal classroom, students can interrupt each other freely. — True / False

6. What will the class do after writing their scripts?

- a. Start a new project
- b. Act out their roles and present them
- c. Forget about the project

After you read

- List two roles you would like to have in your own ideal classroom.
- Design one classroom rule you think would make your class better. Write it as a sentence.
